Fresh almond

The green almond in its tender shell, crunchy and slightly tangy, with a short season.

The fresh almond is harvested before full maturity: its green, downy hull is still tender, and the almond, white and milky, is crunchy. Its taste is fresh, slightly tangy and green, very different from that of the dried almond. It is eaten whole or peeled for cooking. Its season is short, which makes it a highly sought-after product in spring.
